• Type 2 Diabetes and its Treatment If you are living with diabetes, you may also have Type 2 diabetes. Type 2 diabetes is the most common type of diabetes. It is also known as adult-onset diabetes. Type 2 diabetes is linked to being overweight, including obesity, and with high blood pressure and high cholesterol. If you are on blood pressure medication, you may also have Type 2 diabetes. Type 2 diabetes can happen at any age. It happens when the pancreas does not make insulin. Insulin is a hormone that helps glucose get into the body's cells, so that the body's cells can use the glucose as fuel. Type 2 diabetes is the most common type of diabetes. It is also called adult-onset diabetes. Because most people are diagnosed with Type 2 diabetes when they are older, it is also known as late-onset diabetes. You can get Type 2 diabetes if your pancreas does not make enough insulin. The amount of insulin your pancreas makes depends on your genetics, lifestyle, and age.

In general, the younger you are, the more likely you are to have Type 2 diabetes. How do I know if I have Type 2 diabetes? If you have other symptoms of diabetes, you may have Type 2 diabetes. Symptoms of diabetes include: Frequent urination or a feeling of needing to go to the bathroom often. Frequent thirst. Increased thirst even when your body doesn't need extra water. Changes in skin, including pink skin, changes in the eyes, and slow healing of cuts and bruises. Feeling tired all the time. Feeling a lack of energy even when you are active. Abnormal thirst due to more body fluids than usual. Feeling or looking hungry. Feeling tired, irritable, weak, confused, or light-headed Loss of appetite. Diabetes is a long-term condition that can lead to serious health problems if not treated. It is not a normal part of life. It can lead to serious health problems. You can take steps to prevent and treat diabetes. You should: Avoid Partition Find And Mount Pro 231zip .On the eve of Game 6 of the World Series, I can't help but be just a little bit excited about the prospect of the St. Louis Cardinals winning their first World Series in twenty years. A do or die, do-or-don't day for the Cardinals, you might say. That is, of course, true, but in this case, that may not be entirely appropriate. This is not to say that the Cardinals aren't worth watching in the future. Certainly, they're the only team to build an all-conquering powerhouse in the last few decades (minus the Yankees dynasty of the early 20th century). Their pitching has been among the very best in the majors and they're routinely good at finding solutions late in close games and in extra innings. They've been the most consistently dominant and successful team in their division over the last five years or so, and perhaps that factor could carry some weight in deciding the World Series. But despite all of that, the Cardinals are in a bit of a pickle in this series. For the most part, the Cards don't excel at any one thing as opposed to another, and it will be interesting to see how that manifests itself in Game 6. Whether it's the bullpen, the offense or the rotation, the Cards are pretty fluid in their deployment of the parts that make them what they are. The Cardinals are historically good at hitting on the road, but their home/road splits still favor their at-home tendencies. The bullpen might be the most interesting sub-plot in this series since it might determine whether or not the bullpen gets as much as they did in the World Series last year. The Cardinals bullpen is still very good, even with the loss of Michael Wacha to Tommy John. The only issue with a bullpen is its fragility, and with that, we return to balance. The pitching staff is exceptionally well-balanced, with very good starters and very good relievers. However, the order in which they deploy the parts creates some interesting scenarios. The Cards work hard to line up guys who are well-suited for tough situations, but they're not incredibly creative. They bring in Carlos Martinez early in games, for example, because it's an extreme situation. As for the bullpen
